ONTICELLO, one of the most beautiful towns in Indiana, is in an ideal location on the banks of the Tippecanoe river, some seventy-five feet above the bed of that stream, and is located almost midway between Chicago and Indianapolis, at the crossing of the Logansport and Effner division of the Pennsylvania Lines and the Chicago and Indianapolis division of the Monon Route. The town now has a population of about 2,500.

It is a town devoid of the "rougher element" and is an ideal place in which to create a home.

In the past ten years the improvements of the town, in the way of residences, business houses and public buildings, have almost doubled in value and have given the town a great reputation wherever known.

Columns could be written, telling of all these things, but this booklet aims to show, in pictures, what one can find here in the way of residences, business houses, churches, public buildings, etc., and last, but not least, it tells the story of the beauties of the Tippecanoe better than pen can describe the same.

Dozens of places can be found along the Tippecanoe, in close reach of Monticello, ideal for summer residences.

The town is prosperous now and has a bright future. If you are looking for such a place, do not overlook Monticello.
